

NEUROPLASTICITY

Build the Brain you want Reboot: Reset: Reprogram

Overview

Neuroplasticity is the capacity of human brain to adapt and change throughout the life.

Up until the 1960s, researchers believed that changes in the brain could only take place during infancy and childhood. By the early adulthood, it was believed that the brain's physical structure was mostly permanent. Modern research has demonstrated that the brain continues to create new neural pathways in order to adapt to new experiences, learn new information, and create new memories.

Imagine how much better your life would be if you could eliminate all of your bad habits. Learn to embrace and truly absorb new knowledge, and free yourself from the false mental constraints that you believe have been holding you back from pursuing your goals?
